

REFLEXION: second week of classes (march 14th)

In my second week of class, I felt more comfortable and happy because I could work with the grade 8, I did some activities in which they seem to like them, in the activities they had to participate, to identify an adjective in some word I wrote on the board, at the beginning they didn't want to participate but when I showed them a candy almost everybody wanted to, so I think the candy was a good strategy to make them participate and succeed.

Contrary to this group the grades 7 are not that easy to manage, I don't know if it's because in these groups the students are younger but the groups are a little heavy, they seem not to be interested in learning English, just a few students want to work and, as I already applied the group work and it didn't work, I gave them individual activities, and as I always have two hours with them I did two different activities and which I gave them two photocopies, with the first one was totally fine but when I gave them the second activity they had a negative attitude, they didn't want to work in the second activity, so it feels a little frustrated with this group because even they don't want to work, almost all the strategies I use with them seem not to work.
