

Leonardo Henao

Journal

May 24th, 2016

This week was very excited and I learnt a lot from my students.

I gave up doing games and funny activities inside the classroom because the students were very disorganized and barely pay attention, I was willing to given then a ~~second~~ fifth chance (because is important for me to try to solve this learning problems) so instead of bringing activities in which they have to stand up (which is the main problem because they go crazy and mess around the activity) I decided to do something that keeps them still but at the same time they have fun learning, the activity was called POPPING. Basically they have to categorize words into verbs, nouns and adjectives, by using “popcorns” and a “bucket” (a Bucket for each category). The activity was a complete success!! They learn more and they behave correctly. Sometime we have to go beyond we believe to solve problems with our students and that wat I did so I’m proud of myself.

